WCEE and WCED concluded another eventful and exciting year. Beginning with a lecture by former Ambassador Christopher Hill on Afghanistan, WCED public events included lectures and panels by several policymakers and diplomats, former government leaders, international entrepreneurs, and experts on the rule of law in new democracies and post-communist transitions to the market economy. We continued to bring prominent experts and practitioners to campus and the community and offer specialized faculty-led workshops and conferences on topics as varied as Islam and religion, the media, health policy, and much more.

WCEE further continues to support the development of scholarly and policy expertise with Weiser Professional Development Program Fellowships and Weiser Faculty Grants. WCED promotes graduate student research with Weiser Emerging Democracy Graduate Fellowships and the Emerging Democracies Graduate Workshop, in which students engage directly with scholars and practitioners. We thank our many supporters, whose commitment has helped us to expand our programs and secure a place of importance at the University of Michigan.

Center for European Studies
From the Director

CES had a banner year in terms of programming and pedagogy. Our Conversations on Europe series featured presentations by diplomats, scholars, novelists, poets, and musicians. Diego Marani—award-winning novelist and senior linguist and policy officer at the European Commission’s Directorate General for Interpretation—gave our keynote lecture, in collaboration with the LSA theme semester on language. Our programming continues to be enormously popular; CES lectures posted to YouTube have been viewed over 16,000 times. We started a blog this year to give campus experts an opportunity to comment on events in Europe. Our graduate certificate received final approval and was activated during the Winter 2012 semester, and our undergraduate minor continues to grow. As current events unfold in the EU, CES remains an ideal venue for timely and cogent response from scholars and experts.

EUI Visiting Fellow, 2011-12

The Postdoctoral Fellowship for European University Institute PhDs was introduced in 2011 to foster teaching and research on European integration. Applicants from any of the four EUI programs (Political & Social Sciences, Economics, History, and Law) are welcome to apply. This year CREES remained a vibrant institution, fulfilling its core intellectual mission and initiating new programs despite challenges posed by Title VI grant cuts. CREES offered Noon Lectures on political and cultural developments in the 20 years since the USSR’s breakup and hosted the 20th Annual Symposium of SOYUZ, the postsocialist cultural studies network. We launched the Russian Law Workshop, a forum on Russia’s legal system and business climate that was initiated by alumnum Timothy Stubbs to prepare students for internships at Salans Moscow, where he is a partner. We implemented revised curricula and added new graduate courses and an undergraduate minor in Central Eurasian Studies. Extending last year’s 50th anniversary celebration, we organized events for alumni and friends in Washington, DC and Chicago. With their support, CREES is helping to assure U-M’s renown as one of the best places to study Russia, Eastern Europe, and Eurasia.
